Discourse Recommendations

This is a list of major topics the Buddha regularly returned to as well as some representative teachings on those topics as well as further reading in case people are interested in either getting a general taste of the canon or interested in going deeper on certain topics.

Intellectual Foundations of the Path

The Overarching View of the Path
The most frequent way the Buddha described the path to people who were not familiar with it is often termed the "Gradual training." It occurs many times in the suttas.
Example: Digha Nikaya 2
Further Reading: Also pieces of it recur in DN 3-13, Majjhima Nikaya 51, 77, 39, 37

Dependent Origination
The Buddha originally discovered the path by looking for the cause of pain and suffering. He goes through twelve deeper and deeper causes of which the deepest cause is ignorance of the four noble truths.
Ex. Digha Nikaya 15
FR: Samyutta Nikaya Ch 12

Right View
Right View is the foundation of the path. It is the first part of the noble eightfold path, and offers the entry into what the path is and how to come out of suffering. It is most commonly described as the four noble truths, but in many circumstances is presented from slightly different angles.
Ex. DN 1, also the end of Digha Nikaya 22 includes a thorough description of the four noble truths
FR: MN 141, MN 9, MN 1, 102, 49 117

Wholesome and Unwholesome
Prior to speaking about the four noble truths, the Buddha often encouraged developing a clear understanding of what is wholesome and what is not wholesome. Common wholesome qualities are giving, morality, renunciation. Common unwholesome qualities are sense pleasures, hatred, cruelty as well as the five barriers.
Ex. MN 2
FR: MN 8, 113, MN 13-14, MN 128, 114, DN 25

Results of Deeds
The Buddha often emphasized the importance of belief in kamma, that good and bad deeds have good and bad results, as well as that there exists something beyond the material world. This is key not only to liberation, but even to mundane right view.
Ex. Majjhima Nikaya 135-6
FR: MN 142, 101, Anguttara Nikaya 3:24, 3:100, 10:217-220 MN 41-2

Parts of the Path Related to Meditation

Breath Remembrance
One of the most common frameworks that the Buddha used for meditation was integrating the breath with the parts of awakening and the development of calm and discernment in 16 steps.
Ex: Majjhima Nikaya 118
Further Reading: Samyutta Nikaya Ch 54

Teachings on Not Soul
One of the most common teachings that the Buddha taught to monks and nuns, which frequently culminated in their awakening, was guiding them through the five parts of one's identity and understanding each of those parts to be not really one's own, oneself or one's soul.
Ex. Samyutta Nikaya 22.59
Further Reading: Samyutta Nikaya Ch 22, especially 22.57, 22.79, 22.81

Teaching on the Six Sense Bases
The main other framework that the Buddha used for teaching monks and nuns to see impermanence in the context of their own experience was the six sense bases. In this framework, the Buddha guided monks and nuns to see each internal and external sense door, the perception of each sense door, contact, and sensation each as impermanent. This too, very commonly culminated in their awakening.

Ex. Samyutta Nikaya 35.28
FR: Samyutta Nikaya Ch 35, MN 137, MN 143-152

The Establishments of Remembrance
The four establishments of remembrance are a piece of the eightfold noble path. Occasionally the Buddha integrates the whole of the path into these four establishments of remembrance.
Ex. Digha Nikaya 22
FR: Majjhima Nikaya 10, 119

Further Topics and Deeper Dhamma

Key Historical Accounts of the Buddha's life

- The first part of the Vinaya Pitaka, the Mahavagga Chapter 1, "The Great Chapter" offers the story of how the sāsana began up until the Buddha initiating the Sangha.
- Majjhima Nikaya 26 offers a description of the Buddha's original striving to become the Buddha. Sutta Nipata 3.2 offers a description of his being challenged by Mara in that effort.
- Angulimala's story is recounted at Majjhima Nikaya 86.
- In the Vinaya Pitaka, Chapter 7 of the Culla Vagga (here referred to as Chapter 17 of the Khandakas), recounts Devadatta's effort to create a schism in the Sangha.
- The story of Anathapindaka offering the monastery at Savatthi is recounted at the CullaVagga Chapter 6, the Chapter on Lodgings (referred to here as Chapter 16 of the Khandakas).
- Digha Nikaya 16 offers a comprehensive description of the last year of the Buddha's lifetime.
- Digha Nikaya 14 offers a description of the Buddha Vipassi's dispensation in ways that parallel the Buddha's life events.

Poetic Syntheses of the Path
The Sutta Nipata as a whole includes many of the Buddha's most poetic teachings. Some of the most celebrated are:

- Sutta Nipata 1:1-4, 1:8, 2:4, 3:11, all of Chapter 4 & 5

Other Useful Approaches to the Path
Some of the other very common ways that the Buddha used to teach the path were:

- The Vedana Samyutta includes a variety of suttas on the key role sensation plays in the path-Samyutta Nikaya Chapter 36
- The Seven Factors of Awakening-Samyutta Nikaya Chapter 46
- The Five Faculties-Samyutta Nikaya Chapter 48
- The Four Bases for Spiritual Powers- Samyutta Nikaya Chapter 51

Deeper Dhamma

- In Majjhima Nikaya 111, the Buddha praises Sariputta's proficiency with vipassana, discerning each quality as it arises.
- At Digha Nikaya 21, Sakka the ruler of the Gods of the Thirtythree poses a number of very useful questions about the path as a whole.
- At Digha Nikaya 22, the Buddha offers a description of how to maintain a united community and key factors in preserving the sāsana.
- At Digha Nikaya 28 Sariputta recounts some of the deeper elements of the Buddha's teaching
- Digha Nikaya 33 & 34 are Sariputta's compendium of a large variety of the Buddha's teaching from around the canon.
- Majjhima Nikaya 111 is the Buddha praising Sariputta's proficiency with vipassana, discerning each quality as it arises.
